Plasma technology has certainly achieved quite high contrast ratios, a measure of the blackest black compared to the whitest white. Many plasma display manufacturers boast a contrast ratio of 100,000:1 these days though our tests using a standardized ANSI checkerboard pattern have not proven these numbers out. Plasma TVs achieve such impressive black levels by using internal algorithms to block the power to particular pixels in order to render a pixel "dark" or black.

A larger TV might also give you better sound quality, as there's more space for built-in speakers. No worries about missing the roar of the crowd! If you're scaling up the size of your TV, you may way want to scale up the resolution too. A bigger TV with a smaller resolution will start to look pixelated.
